A THESAURUS OF EDUCATIONAL TERMS WAS PRODUCED TO PROVIDE A TERMINOLOGY BASE WHICH WOULD BE AMENABLE TO RAPID AND EASY MODIFICATION AND UPDATING. THE PRIMARY SOURCE OF TERMS WAS A SEMANTIC CODE DICTIONARY, PREVIOUSLY CREATED DURING THE INDEXING OF SOME 6,500 EDUCATIONAL RESEARCH DOCUMENTS. A FACETED STRUCTURE WAS CREATED. THE DISPLAY CONSISTED OF (1) AN ALPHABETICAL LIST, (2) A FACETED ARRAY, (3) A REPRESENTATIVE LIST OF IDENTIFIERS, AND (4) A PERMUTED DESCRIPTOR LIST. NOTES AND FIGURES WERE INCLUDED FOR USE OF THE FACETED DISPLAY. RECOMMENDATIONS INCLUDED WERE (1) THAT THE U.S. OFFICE OF EDUCATION MAKE OPERATIONAL TESTS, MODIFICATIONS, AND ADDITIONS BASED UPON THE SUGGESTIONS OF SUBJECT SPECIALISTS AND INFORMATION EXPERTS, AND (2) THAT INDEXERS AND SEARCHERS RECEIVE TRAINING IN THE USE OF THESAURUS SO THAT THEY WOULD BE ABLE TO EXPLOIT ITS FULL POTENTIAL. THE PREPARATION OF A THESAURUS OF EDUCATIONAL TERMS

I. Introduction

The Center for Documentation and Communication Research (CDCR) first proposed the development of a thesaurus of education terms in the fall of 1964 shortly after the creation of ERIC within the U. S. Office of Education. An amendment to the CDCR's then current contract* enabled preliminary work on the thesaurus to begin in January, 1965. But it was not until October, 1965 and the initiation of Project No. B170-C that the CDCR's educational research information project was devoted exclusively to thesaurus preparation.

Both the U. S. Office of Education and the CDCR recognized at the outset that any thesaurus developed under this contract could be no more than a starting point, a fact that is adequately supported by thesaurus developments in other fields. The CDCR's major purpose, therefore, was to produce a terminology base that would be amenable to rapid and easy modification and updating. It was also recognized that ERIC would have immediate need for an indexing vocabulary to serve its various information centers, and a secondary aim, therefore, was to produce a vocabulary that could be applied operationally at a limited level of specificity. We believe that the thesaurus accompanying this final report satisfies both of those objectives.

II. Thesaurus Development

A thesaurus serves three general purposes in information retrieval systems. First it provides an authority list, i.e., it specifies the words (or descriptors) that can be used in indexing and searching. Second, it indicates, if there is any doubt, the general scope of meaning of the terms included. The purpose of such control is to ensure that the information content of documents and questions is described as precisely and as consistently as possible. Third, a thesaurus structures a vocabulary of a subject field to assist indexers and searchers in tracing all of the descriptors relevant to a given concept.

A. Source of Terms

The primary source of terms for this thesaurus has been the Semantic Code Dictionary of Education Terms. This dictionary, containing approximately 10,000 index terms, was the product of indexing more than 6,500 documents in many different areas of educational research under earlier contracts from the U. S. Office of Education. Other sources of terms included indexes to books in specialized areas of education, lists of occupational titles, various glossaries in education, lists of index terms developed by several emerging information centers in education, and thesauri under development in related fields. The above sources provided a very large number of terms and it was necessary that the vocabulary be reduced to more manageable proportions. A partial reduction resulted from the elimination of geographical locations and the names of specific institutions and educational tests. A further, more substantial, reduction was accomplished by the elimination of all but one of a group of essentially synonymous grammatical variants of the same term.

B. Faceted Structure

The terms in the reduced list (about 4,500) were first grouped into four very generic classes or facets: activities, characteristics, people, and things. These facets represented, very broadly of course, the major classes of research variables found in the research literature and the research-oriented questions processed at the CDCR. The number of such facets increased gradually to a total of seventeen over the contract period. Facets were divided into smaller clusters of more closely related terms called subfacets and subfacets were subdivided in the final stages of analysis into groups. It was this process of division and subdivision which required the largest share of staff effort. Although it is not possible here to analyze in any detail the specific characteristics of the facets and how they were derived, Appendix A will provide some insight into their underlying conceptual structure.

It was felt from the very beginning that some kind of classification structure should be applied to the terms in the thesaurus in order to impose a maximum degree of terminological control; but such control should not be so rigid as to prevent the display of the complex network of relationships among educational terms. Faceting, therefore, seemed the best approach to a solution of the problem.

C. Inclusion Procedures and Problems

Thesaurus building involves a constant process of "take out, put in, or change." While neither putting in nor changing was neglected, the primary emphasis turned out to be one of taking out. In some cases we discovered, not really to our surprise, that many natural-language words that had been used as index terms were without any discriminating power at all. These words were eliminated wherever possible. In other cases, words were removed because of too great a specificity.

Examples from the non-discriminating group are such words as "deterrent" and "innovation." "Deterrent" is basically a role word, and among a set of fifteen or twenty index terms, it would not seem to allow for discrimination between the deterrent and the deterred. The validity of something being an "innovation" is so dependent upon time and place that it, too, would seem to be of little value as an index term.

With respect to the exclusion of highly specific terms, some background information is necessary. Since the CDCR had concentrated during 1961-1963 on indexing documents representing a relatively limited field--the newer media and allied basic psychological studies--the vocabulary contained many very specific media-oriented terms. We felt that in spite of the liberal addition of terms from other areas of education, the presence of the very specific media terms would give a curiously lopsided appearance to the thesaurus. Thus we eliminated the names of teaching devices and techniques developed for one study only, and even dropped some more generally accepted terms which still seemed too specific. For example, while we kept "branching program" (in the programmed learning sense), we dropped the more specific "forward branching" and "backward branching." If the need arises these terms can be re-included without difficulty.

A further example of the problems of term inclusion can be provided by an examination of the flood of terms appearing in Good's dictionary[1] under such words as "curriculum" and "education." One realizes the impossibility--at least the present impossibility--of incorporating every one of those terms into a general thesaurus. Their inclusion is obviously something that can only be determined in an operational environment. In all instances, we have tried to find terms of an intermediate specificity; that is, words which are at once specific enough to give discriminating power, and yet broad enough to allow for even more specific terms to be added if necessary.

III. Addition and Modification

Guidelines for the addition of terms to the thesaurus are to a great extent inherent in the general headings provided in Appendix A and in the terms in the thesaurus itself. The thesaurus framework is such that it should be relatively easy to add new terms. By saying this, however, we do not mean to imply that the framework will survive without modification. It will eventually have to be adjusted, especially so in any attempt to expand it into something approaching a comprehensive thesaurus for education. But we believe that the framework is flexible enough to support the addition and structuring of a great many and a great variety of new terms without having to be radically changed.

IV. Thesaurus Format and Structure

The thesaurus itself is divided into four parts: an alphabetical list (Part I); a faceted array (Part II); a representative list of identifiers (Part III); and a permuted descriptor list (Part IV). Figures 1 and 2 illustrate the general format of Parts I and II. The facet display (Part II) may seem a radical innovation to some users but cannot really be considered so in view of the work done by Brenner, et al., at the American Petroleum Institute.[2] Its use will be discussed in Part V of this report. Other special features of this thesaurus are described below.

Broader-term (BT) and narrower-term (NT) hierarchies are built so that a BT can be automatically posted from any of its NT's. The number of these hierarchies included in the thesaurus is therefore relatively small. Very general descriptors are asterisked (*) and users should seriously consider adding more precise terms to the thesaurus in the concept areas represented by these asterisked descriptors.

Parenthetical qualifiers are used sparingly and are intended primarily to solve problems caused by true homographs. Even a cursory examination of the scope notes will indicate that we have had no desire to turn this thesaurus into another educational dictionary. On the latter point, we feel that, if there exist serious, widespread problems in definition of educational terms, such problems are properly the concern of educational specialists; a specialized thesaurus is an indexing and retrieval tool, the ultimate utility of which is dependent on the state of clarity and organization existing within its specialized subject area.

Some comments should be made here about the different types of related terms (RT). The @ sign after an RT may be considered as a type of "weighting," in the following sense. If a descriptor A has as a reciprocal RT a reference to B, it means that one will also find a reference to A under descriptor B, and thus the two descriptors, while not at all necessarily conceptually similar in themselves, have been considered as frequently being closely related from certain research points of view. There will also generally be only one reciprocal RT from a descriptor in any one subfacet to any one descriptor in another subfacet. This is because the subfacets have been structured in such a way that if descriptor A is closely related to descriptor B and vice versa, the other members of the respective subfacets should also have a more or less close relationship.

Reciprocal RT's have also been generated from BT-NT hierarchies in the following manner. If two descriptors A and B are listed as narrower descriptors (NT) under their common broader descriptor C, then when A appears as a descriptor, C is listed under A as a BT, and B is listed under descriptor A as an RT.

Example: READING (C)
NT ORAL READING (A)
SILENT READING (B)

ORAL READING (A)
BT READING (C)
RT SILENT READING (B)

also: SILENT READING (B)
BT READING (C)
RT ORAL READING (A)

This type of reciprocal RT has not been suffixed with the @ sign.

Another type of RT occurs with the very general descriptors indicated by an asterisk (*). In this case the indexer should always check the subfacet first to locate any more specific descriptors. In instances where these more specific descriptors would not belong to the same subfacet and group as the asterisked descriptor, they have been listed as RT's.

A feature which will be immediately noticeable to many even on a rapid skimming is the relative absence of long lists of related terms (RT's) and, as their partial replacement, a number which identifies the facet and subfacet in which any given descriptor appears.

V. Use of the Faceted Display

As in the use of any thesaurus, it is absolutely necessary that an indexer or searcher negotiate each and every descriptor. By negotiate we mean "look it up and follow it through the thesaurus." The extent to which any given descriptor will be traced through the thesaurus in all its relationships will depend to a certain extent upon the demands of the situation (depth of indexing or generality of search) and the expertise of the indexer or searcher. However, it is absolutely imperative that the subfacet of any given descriptor be browsed through. The faceted display and the alphabetical thesaural display are functionally interdependent and this must be remembered at all times by any user of the thesaurus whether for indexing or searching.

The degree of the usefulness of consulting and browsing through a subfacet will vary, sometimes sharply. It will depend, in part, on the level of specificity of the descriptor of entry. For example, if a very specific search is desired and the searcher starts with a very specific descriptor, consulting the faceted display may well offer nothing more of value. It will also depend, in part, on the degree to which a given area of terminology, and thus its subfacet, have been developed in the thesaurus. For example, in this present draft, one may go from a descriptor to that descriptor's group in its subfacet, and discover that it is the only descriptor of its kind in that group. Indeed, it may even be the only descriptor in that group. This is relatively rare even now, but it does occur. This might not change even over a long period of adding descriptors to the thesaurus: that is, in spite of one's desire for symmetry at all times and in all places, certain concepts are so unique that they may well never have any "closely related terms."

When one turns from the facet-subfacet number appearing beneath a descriptor in the thesaural display, to the indicated locations in the faceted display itself, the user will not necessarily find his entry descriptor immediately. This is because the descriptor will also be a member of a particular group of its subfacet, and any given subfacet may have several groups.

VI. Recommendations

No thesaurus will develop into a useful indexing and searching tool unless it is operationally tested, added to, modified and vigorously discussed by both information experts and subject specialists. This cannot be stressed strongly enough. It is therefore the CDCR's first recommendation that the USOE pursue such a course with this initial thesaurus of education terms.

The CDCR's second recommendation is that the USOE, and in particular, the staff of ERIC, recognize the importance of training sessions for indexers and searchers; no thesaurus will be effective unless such people are thoroughly trained to exploit its full potential.
